

I am writing in response to RM-10412, a proposal requiring most commercially manufactured Amateur Radio transmitters and transceivers to be field-repairable.

I see this as an unnecessary restriction on radio manufacturers that may cause prices to rise or manufacturers to leave the market or both. As a practical matter, today's radios are very reliable and I am not aware of "field repairability" being a serious issue to most amateurs.

Regards,

David Merriweather
N2RSC